

Michiel Damoiseaux tells...

2009

2009 was the year that I founded my own company as self-employed trainer and consultant. In that year I had finished reading Synchronicity by Joseph Jaworski on holidays. Jaworski taught me some things; that the road to success holds not to walk alone, to be congruent in action and that the path emerges along the way. And I had a dream, one to work congruently towards. That dream holds that I can offer people both content and location to better balance the different types of intelligences in ourselves. Ultimately leading to people being fit and healthy, being self-reflective, continuously learning and coping with complexity that surrounds us all.

In 2009 a good friend of mine introduced me to the Perspectivity Game. I joined a Train the Trainer session and familiarised myself with this nice instrument for application in cooperation/teamwork sessions. Most of my clients have enjoyed the game-sessions as part of their management strategy and teambuilding sessions. But there was more beyond the game. There were inspiring weekend sessions and there were lots of interesting people with very different backgrounds. So when the opportunity presented itself, I immediately joined the Perspectivity Enterprise. I am now part of a network organisation, consisting of both volunteers and trainers/facilitators. That combination is something quite different from what I see around me in organisations and something to be very proud of. So following Jaworski, I'm no longer walking alone and practicing what I believe, the future is further unfolding towards that dream I have. The opportunity to host sessions at home is taking form, since I bought a new house that I'm currently renovating. Conveniently located next to a community garden complex. So literally a lot of food for thought. And that's what I hope to keep on offering: Food for Thought.
